Aliens from another world send a huge robotic accumulator to invade the Earth and absorb all energy it comes in contact with. A giant asteroid nearly five miles wide crashes into the ocean near Mexico. A trio of scientists, led by Les Gaskell, investigate, and discover a giant machine. Meanwhile, a colleague of the scientists has been possessed by an alien electricity, and is controlling the actions of a 100-foot-tall robot, which is heading for Los Angeles and destroying all in its path. I first saw this movie at a Saturday matinee when I was very young. I thought it was cool and often thought about it. Well I finally resaw it on DVD. It was still very entertaining but in a different way. It has to rank as one of the goofiest, campiest, 1950's sci-fi movies. It seemed filled with stock military footage. The dialogue is stilted and effects are crude. There is one line of dialogue that had me in stitches. The line Jeff Morrow says while on the beach with the babe. Rent it if you need a movie to watch with a bunch of drunken friends. It is a classic. KRONOS is about an unconventional alien invasion. This time, instead of puny E.T.s, we get a massive, skyscraper-sized, seemingly unstoppable robot, sent here on a mission that could result in our total annihilation! Can a team of scientists, led by the intrepid Dr. Leslie Gaskell (Jeff Morrow- THIS ISLAND EARTH, THE CREATURE WALKS AMONG US), discover a weakness in this titanic terror, before it completes its march of doom? For its time, KRONOS is well-realized and threatening. Its mode of locomotion is unique, and the sound effects are impressive. Co-stars the omnipresent Morris Ankrum (INVADERS FROM MARS, EARTH VS. THE FLYING SAUCERS, etc., etc.) as Dr. Albert Stern... P.S.- I definitely want the musical soundtrack!...
